Discrimination: Minority Nurse Awarded Verdict.

n African-American nurse was hired Aas a nurse manager, then was demoted to the position of senior staff nurse newly hired at the hospital came into the after she reportedly used her management room and stole her epidural pump. position to speak out about discriminatory practices at the facility.

damages. That included compensation for medication to treat his dog. lost income as well as injury to her professional reputation, mental anguish and emo- gent infliction of emotional distress. She tional distress.

separate violations of state and Federal laws, direct discrimination against her and retaliation against her for opposing dis- cians assistant's employment references crimination against others.

The jury reportedly heard corroborating testimony from other facility employees that she was treated differently than other managers. Hollis v. Texas Tech., 2011 6, 2011).

Labor & Delivery: Nurse Gave Oxygen And Pitocin At The Same Time.

lawsuit filed in the Circuit Court, Kane County, Illinois resulted in court approval of a $5,000,000 settlement court approval of a $5,000,000 settlement A n elderly nursing home patient died from the hospital to be paid into a trust A after being bitten by a brown recluse fund on behalf of an infant born with se-spider at the facility. The family sued. vere cerebral palsy.

tal oxygen but leaving the Pitocin running regular pest-control program. at the same time.

perts' opinions. Betancourt v. Rush System, filing suit. Omaha Healthcare v. Johnson, March 17, 2011).

Stolen Epidural: Jury Finds No Negligence.

hile the patient was in labor a physicians assistant who had been

He was eventually prosecuted for the scribed as alteration in mental status. crime, placed on probation and stripped of The jury in the District Court, El Paso his physicians assistant credentials. He with long-standing medical diagnoses of County, Texas awarded her $513,000 in insisted he did it in order to use the pain

The patient sued the hospital for neglihad to wait while another pump was in-The lawsuit was premised on two stalled and was questioned by hospital security personnel in her hospital bed.

> The hospital pointed out the physi- for treatment. were contacted and a standard background check was done before he was hired and nothing turned up raising a red flag he had criminal tendencies.

The jury in the Superior Court, Stam-WL 2626563 (Dist. Ct. El Paso Co., Texas, May ford-Norwalk County, Connecticut agreed that the hospital had fulfilled the full extent of its legal responsibilities and was not negligent for failing to anticipate and prevent what happened. Loglisci v. Stamford Hosp., 2011 WL 2432784 (Sup. Ct. Stamford Co., Connecticut, April 27, 2011).

Spider Bite: Family Of Nursing Home Patient Sues.

n elderly nursing home patient died

The Supreme Court of Texas pointed Expert witnesses for the family were out that state regulations in Texas as in prepared to testify that the labor and deliv- other states and Federal standards require a ery nurse was at fault for seeing the need to nursing home to maintain a safe, sanitary and dementia. Even if the patient did exstart and starting the mother on supplemen- and comfortable environment and to have a perience respiratory failure it was not nec-

That being said, the family's lawsuit The nurse was also faulted for delay in was dismissed because the Court deter- autopsy and his experts were not allowed reporting signs of fetal distress that, if re- mined it was a health-care liability case for ported promptly, would have resulting in which an expert's opinion on the standard the cesarean being done sooner, in the ex- of care was a mandatory prerequisite to 2011 WL 2489019 (Cir. Ct. Kane Co., Illinois, S.W. 3d __, 2011 WL 2586851 (Tex., July 1, 2011).

Dysphagia: Family Cannot Prove Negligence Was Cause Of Death.

he ninety-four year-old patient was brought to the E.R. for what was de-

She was already in very poor health dementia and dysphagia. The patient's son had declined the feeding tube which the physicians had recommended and, after having been trained to do so, had been feeding his mother himself at home.

The diagnosis in the E.R. was a urinary tract infection and she was admitted

While being fed lunch by a nurse the patient became unresponsive. She was revived, but after discussions with the son and his brother, the physicians elected not to provide further heroic measures and she passed away later that evening.

The Court is not persuaded to depart from the established rule that proof a medical negligence case requires expert testimonv.

SUPREME COURT OF RHODE ISLAND June 24, 2011

The Supreme Court of Rhode Island would not allow the case to go forward without expert testimony that the nurse was guilty of negligence.

It cannot be assumed from the mere fact that the patient expired while a nurse was feeding her that the nurse did not take appropriate precautions for feeding a patient with known histories of dysphagia essarily caused by aspiration of her food.

The son had declined the offer of an to testify because they were not available for pre-trial depositions, but it was only speculation whether the autopsy or the experts' testimony would have helped his case. Manilou v. Miriam Hosp., A. 3d , 2011 WL 2517231 (R.I., June 24, 2011).

Legal Eagle Eye Newsletter for the Nursing Profession

August 2011