Informed Consent: Court Looks At Nursing Responsibilities.

he patient came to the medical center with kidney stones. Because the stones did not pass, surgery was necessary.

The center's policy was to require separate informed-consent forms for surgery and for anesthesia.

The nurse's role was limited to verifying that consent had been given, that is, before the nurse signed the informedconsent form as a witness to the patient's signature the nurse was expected to check to be sure that:

Information about the surgery was provided to the patient prior to surgery;

An explanation was provided to the patient by the anesthesia provider;

The patient or the patient's healthcare surrogate decision-maker gave consent to treatment after discussion;

The patient or surrogate was given the opportunity to ask questions about the proposed treatment and that all of these questions were answered fully;

All the blanks on the form were filled in with the necessary information; and

The patient or surrogate signed the form.

expected benefits of the surgery and the method of anesthesia.

Nurse Merely Had the Patient Sign The Anesthesia Consent Form

The nurse got the patient to sign an anesthesia-consent form which was blank as to the type of anesthesia that was to be provide the information necessary for in- but not the left. The left leg had to be amused. Nor had the anesthesia provider, a formed consent but to verify that the pa- putated below the knee a week later. certified registered nurse anesthetist tient has been given the necessary informathe patient any information before the patient signed the form at the nurse's behest.

administering the spinal block and made this case, according to the Court. quite a number of puncture wounds in the patient's back. Afterward a physician dithe multiple spinal punctures.

grounds for a lawsuit by the patient against the medical center.

The medical center claimed the nurse met the requirements of the medical center's informed-consent policy by getting the patient to sign a blank consent-toanesthesia form and then signing it as the witness to the patient's signature.

However, it is not clear how that was anvthing more than an empty gesture, given the fact the patient had received no information about anesthesia before he signed the form.

COURT OF APPEALS OF ARKANSAS September 7, 2011

Informed Consent Nursing Responsibilities

The Court agreed with the medical The medical center's policy went on to center it is not a nursing responsibility to say that the physician and the anesthesia obtain informed consent for anesthesia. provider were to obtain consent from the That was the legal responsibility of the patient after they had advised the patient as CRNA who was an independent contractor to the risks, drawbacks, complications and and not an employee of the medical center.

However, the medical center's policy for its employee nurses in regard to informed consent went beyond the mere formality of having the patient put a signature finished the case. It was discovered there on the necessary paperwork.

The CRNA reportedly had trouble responsibility was completely absent in by advocating for her patient.

ment is no informed consent at all and no due to technical problems with the paagnosed a serious inflammatory condition legal defense to liability if the patient tient's experts' formulation of how the known as arachnoiditis that was caused by claims he or she would not have had the medical literature defined the standard of procedure if he or she had actually known care for padding and positioning a surgical The Court of Appeals of Arkansas saw what was really involved. Villines v. North patient in 2003 when the incident occurred. Arkansas Reg. Med. Ctr., __ S.W. 3d __ , 2011 Carroll v. Univ. Med. Ctr., __ S.W. 3d __ , 2011 WL 3916143 (Ark. App., September 7, 2011). Carroll v. Univ. Med. Ctr., __ S.W. 3d __ , 2011 WL 4407449 (Ky. App., September 23, 2011).

O.R.: Perioperative Nurse Advocated For The Patient.

fter a CT scan revealed a mass in the Apatient's colon the physicians decided he needed to have surgery.

He was taken to the surgical suite and placed under anesthesia at 9:30 a.m. Then several hours went by while the general surgeon who was in the operating room attempted to contact a colorectal surgery specialist to come and take over the case.

At 12:30 p.m. a colorectal surgeon came in, examined the large intestine with a sigmoidoscope and continued as the surgeon on the case.

At 4:30 p.m. one of the O.R. nurses voiced her concern to the colorectal surgeon over the fact the patient had been in lithotomy position for number of hours and should be repositioned.

surgeon acknowledged the nurse's concerns but did not change the patient's positioning.

COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY September 23, 2011

At 10:40 p.m. the colorectal surgeon was no pulse in either of the patient's legs. It is a nursing responsibility, not to Circulation soon resumed in the right leg,

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky (CRNA) even met with the patient or given tion by the provider to make a truly in- approved a jury verdict which found no formed decision to consent to surgery or negligence by the hospital. The nurse, a surgical anesthesia. That essential nursing hospital employee, had done her legal duty

The colorectal surgeon, an independ-An invalid informed-consent docu- ent contractor, was also found not liable